REVIEW

OF THE

STATE

OF THE

ENGLISH NATION.

Thursday, September 5. 1706.

I Observ'd in my last, how Europe is apprehensive of new Conflagrations, and the Judgments of Heaven, for wistous doubt War is a Judgment, seem rather to threaten her with Encrease, than any Deliverance.

I cannot but spare a few Thoughts upon this Head: The Swede, we are told, unable to reduce by Force that vigilant and indefatigable Prince the King of Poland, are at last resolv'd to enter Saxony; and rather than not compass their ambitious Ends, for I can call it no better, will now lay waste a flourishing and populous, as well as Protestant Country.

It is hard to see the separate Interests of Nations are such, that the Considerations of Religion, and the Injury to, and weakening of its Interest in the World have no Weight, when the Feuds of War prompt

Men of Power to pursue their Advantages. Hitherto, I doubt the strong Mediation both of England and Holland, with the King of Sweden, has not been able to prevail with him to set Bounds to his Proceedings; and as the Case has been remote, they have us'd no other Methods with him, tho' his carrying on his Polish War, I believe, has in it self been many ways very much to the Prejudice of the Confederacy now on Foot.

Whether they will stand still, and see the Swede advance to the Heart of Germany, see them reduce the most flourishing Electorate of Saxony, and put themselves thereby into a Posture to turn the Scale of Europe, when they please, I cannot determine: If I might be allow'd to present my Thoughts, I cannot think it can be safe for any Part of the Confederates.

The

The King of Prussia would see himself surrounded, the Dane would find himself concern'd, the whole Circle of the Lower Saxony would have reason to dread the Neighbourhood of the Swedes, the Landgrave of Hesse-Cassel cannot be easie, the Princes of Luxemburg are particularly concern'd to extinguish a Flame, which if it burns on, must endanger their Frontiers, and embroil them with a Neighbour too potent to quarrel with.

I will not say the Swedes are Confederate with France in this, but I may say, he cannot serve the French Interest more; for if he is embroil'd with the Northern Princes, the Troops of those Princes must necessarily be recall'd out of the Confederate Service to defend their Neighbours.

Had the English and Dutch thought fit to have abandon'd this young Heroe at his first Entrance upon the Stage of Honour, he had been crush'd in his Beginning, and the Pole and the Dane in Conjunction had crippled his Power — and had not Her Majesty laid Her Hand upon this Affair, and sometime since prevented some Neighbouring Powers falling upon him, he had before now been call'd off to other Work than invading his Neighbours. Whether his Requital be suitable to the Treatment he has met with from England, I will not conclude; but I think, I may say, without Vanity, it has always been in Her Majesty's Power to let that Prince know, That Her Friendship was of too great Value to be neglected.

I know, it has been alleg'd that the Swedes fought the Cause of God, and punish'd the Apostacy and Injustice of the Polish King, and that they were Defenders of the Protestant Religion, and would establish it in Poland.

I refer such Advocates for this Cause to the Treaty concluded between the Swedes, and their new King Stanislaus; herein, if we have the Conditions right, we find the Protestants wholly abandon'd and given up, and not the least Article relating to Religion entred upon in that Treaty.

But, pray, Gentlemen, What Part of the Cause of God, what Care of the Protestant Interest can carry them into Saxony? Will they plant the Protestant Religion in Saxony?

Will they pull down Antichrist and Idolatry there? Have the Swedes chang'd their Religion? Are they not already zealous Protestants? Was it not the first Country in that Part of the World that embrac'd this Reformation? Was not their Prince the first that shelter'd Luther, and defended him against the Cruelty and Persecution of the Roman Clergy?

Again; Was not the Elector of Saxony, the first Founder of the famous League that restord Germany to her Liberty, and secur'd all the Protestant Powers under the Conduct of Gustavus Adolphus? — That join'd his Army, and fought the terrible Battle of Lutzen never match'd yet, either for its Fury in Fight, Compleatness of Victory, and prodigious Consequences, nor by Blenheim or Ramellies?

These are the People, and this the Country, we are told, the Swedes are now going to fall upon; — presuming, I suppose, that the Princes of Europe cannot spare time for Hands to relieve them, in which I doubt not but they will be mistaken; and tho' it will be a War we shall be very sorry to see begun, wherein Protestants shall draw their victorious Swords one against another, and thereby give Breath to the great Enemy, whom now they have at an Advantage: Yet the Fault, and I hope the Punishment must lie on the Aggressor; I do not direct, nor suggest any thing, but this I hope will be allow'd me; that if the Swede shall attempt to invade the Elector: of Saxony, I hope, all the Protestant Powers of Europe will be mov'd to take that People to their Protection, and prevent not only their Destruction, but to keep any Power from a Capacity of giving a new Turn to the present Affairs of Europe.

The Swedes are at present Remote, and if the French and they were both united, I see no great Harm they could do us more than by a Diversion, which indeed they have done already: But if the Swedes reduce Poland, and get Possession of Prussia, I do not say they will do it; but they will be both near enough, and strong enough to tell you, when you have beaten the French enough, and when you shall beat them no more.

It will be in their Power to keep employ'd the Kings of Prussia and Denmark, with the Princes of Luxemburg and Saxony, that you shall have no Help from them, The Emperor, the Landgrave of Hesse, and the Elector Palatine may be calling out to you for Help, and whenever they please, they shall reinstate the Elector of Bavaria.

What if the Security were ten times greater than it is, that they will not attempt it, that they will not come into the French Interests or French Councils; I appeal to all the wise Statesmen of this Age, whether it can be Prudence in the Powers concern'd to let it come into any Man's Power to do it, if he will?

What occasion has Europe to lie so much at any Prince's Mercy? What reason to permit any Prince to be able to say, he could do so and so? Shall the Safety of Europe, and the Success of the present War be put to a Hazard, when there is no need for it? Shall we trust the Ambition of the best Prince in the World with such an Opportunity? I hope, I have no reason to fear they will do so; and certainly if the Swedes make such an Attempt, they must either be infatuated, or believe all the Protestant Powers of Europe are unable to restrain them, or asleep and careless of their Affairs.

But after all we are told, and some of our News Writers are forward to make the Distinction, Viz. That this invasion is not by the Swedes, but by King Stanislaus and Prince Sobieski — Now, as I am not at all concern'd to inquire, whether this be a real or Political Distinction, so I shall not trouble the Reader to expose so barefac'd a Suggestion, or to examine, what Condition King Stanislaus or the Prince Sobieski are in to invade Saxony, if the Swedes either did not assist them, or support them, or march under them?

Let therefore the Invasion be attempted by who it will, I do not say, the Swedes are the Authors of it; but this I may venture to say, 'twill be a hard Task to make the World believe 'tis an Invasion of any body else; and the attempting to cover it, seems doing a Dishonour to the Swedes, as if they were going about something they were ashamed to own.

I cannot persuade myself, but the King of Sweden will be well advis'd, before he attempts such a thing, and doubtless will listen to the powerful Remonstrances of the rest of the Protestant Powers of Europe, and consider the dreadful Conflagration that must follow such a new Breach; for without doubt it must be a Breach, and if I am not more Phlegmatick than I should be, it will have such Effects, if it happens at this Juncture, as will give a new Face to the Affairs of Europe.

I confess, I see nothing but the Interposition of some remote Accident, such as this, or such as the Hungarians proving victorious, or such as the taking Turin, that can retrieve the French Affairs; and I should be very sorry to have any occasion to lament, that Protestant Powers should save Popish Tyranny from a Fall so remarkable, as what seems now inevitable.

It has often been remark'd in History, and not without just Regret; that the Dissension and private Jarrs of the Christian Princes open'd the Door to the Greatness of Mahometan Power, and let the Turks into Europe; if that be true, how many flourishing Nations has that unhappy Mischief destroy'd, and how are their Posterity embrac'd in the Arms of Heathenism and Barbarity, a Consideration worth the Notice of the Protestant Princes of Europe; whose Power, as establish'd by the Conquests of their Glorious Monarchs, Gustavus Adolphus, King William and Queen Anne, can never be destroy'd, but by their Want of Union and Understanding one among another?
